When I started in tech sales circa 2007, one of the first things they said in training was, you don't want to sound like vendor verbal vomit. This blog is vendor verbal vomit. The only thing I have to sell is sin, confusion, blindness, vice, disorder, profanity, despair, and death. I hear that sometimes the Holy Spirit

Excerpts from Boyd Camak's blog

These reflections, tagged "Thrown / Disoriented / Unmoored," offer an existentialist Christian perspective on life's deepest challenges. They explore how God might work through disorientation, suffering, and chaos—not to punish, but to shape the soul.

Drawing parallels between personal pain and the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ, these posts wrestle honestly with the idea that true Christianity is less about formulaic uses this collage of cliches and foolishness to do some good.

theology and more about staying awake—emotionally, spiritually, and relationally—in a world that often feels like hell.

Rather than relying on intellectual systems alone, the author leans into vulnerability, faith, and the sustaining power of community. The writing invites readers to consider that facing reality in all its brokenness is not a detour from the spiritual path, but the very terrain of transformation.

What emerges is not a polished theology but a lived one—one that insists that sanity, meaning, and even peace are possible, not by escaping life’s pain, but by walking through it with Christ.
